Courses

The Center for Writing and libraries at the University of Iceland offer a variety of courses to help students and staff to find and work with sources, write essays and theses, and work smart.

The courses are open to all students at the university unless otherwise advertised.

Course examples:

- BA/BS theses - The first steps
- Citations in the APA and Chicago Manual of Style
- Finding sources
- The structure of academic writing
- Using EndNote

One-on-one sessions

The Center for Writing offers one-on-one or small group writing consultations. Consultations take place at the National and University Library, or on Teams.

From the first class assignment to the final thesis, all students are welcome to book a session with a peer tutor at the center. You can book via the center's website. The National and University Library along with the School of Health Sciences invite individuals and small groups to book a session to find sources for their academic work.

More information can be found at the libraries' websites.

Center for Writing workshops

Workshops are a great way for people to come together for mutual support at all stages of writing, from the research question to the final draft. Participants can share ideas and give each other advice on their work.

The Center for Writing offers workshops in both English and Icelandic for students who are writing their theses. These are open to all students at the University of Iceland.

The center also offers a variety of workshops, writing seminars, and retreats for master's and PhD students from all schools at the university.

More information about the offerings can ben found on the Center of Writing's website.

Workshop Against Procrastination

At this event, students are invited for workshops, one-on-one assistance, and information all designed to help them finish their coursework and become better time managers.

The event takes place at the National and University Library every year during spring semester, with offerings from the Center of Writing, Student and Career Counseling, the National and University Library, and the library of the School of Health Sciences.
