Courses

The Center for Writing and libraries at the University of Iceland offer a variety of courses to help students and staff find and work with sources, write essays and theses, and work smart.

The courses are open to all students at the university unless otherwise advertised.

Course examples:

- ◆ Using EndNote
- ◆ Finding sources
- ◆ Using eBooks as sources
- ◆ Lighten your load through leitir.is
- ◆ Special databases for mental health research
- ◆ BA/BS theses - The first steps
- ◆ Structure and flow in academic writing
- ◆ Citations in the APA and Chicago Manual of Style

Personal assistance

The Center for Writing offers one-on-one or small group writing consultations. Consultations take place on the second floor of the National Library and University Library, in the

From the first class assignment to the final thesis, all students are welcome to book a time with a peer tutor at the center. You can book via the center's website.

The libraries at the School of Education and the School of Health Sciences, along with the National and University Library, invite individuals and small groups to book times for help in finding sources for their academic work.

Center for Writing workshops

Workshops are a great way for people to come together for mutual support at all stages of writing, from the research question to the final draft. Participants can share ideas and give each other advice on their work.

The Center for Writing offers workshops in both English and Icelandic for students who are writing their undergraduate theses. These are open to all students at the University of Iceland.

The center also holds a series of workshops, writing seminars, and retreats for master's and PhD students from all schools at the university.

More information about the offerings can be found on the Center for Writing's website.

The Long Night against Procrastination

At this event, students are invited for workshops, one-on-one assistance and information designed to help them finish their coursework and become better time managers.

The event takes place at the National and University Library every year in spring, with offerings from the Center for Writing, Student and Career Counseling, the National and University Library, and the libraries of the School of Education and the School of Health Sciences.
