Courses

The writing centres and libraries at the University of Iceland offer a variety of course to help students and staff find and work with sources, write essays and theses, and work smart.

The courses are open to all students at the university unless otherwise advertised.

Course examples:
- Using EndNote
- Finding sources
- Using eBooks as sources
- Lighten your load through leitir.is
- Special databases for mental health research
- BA/BS theses - The first steps
- The structure of academic writing
- APA citation system

Personal assistance

The writing centres offer one-on-one or small group writing consultations. Consultations take place on the second floor of the National and University Library of Iceland, in the School of Education library in Stakkahlið, or on Skype.

From the first class assignment to the final thesis, all students are welcome to book a time with a peer tutor at the writing centres. You can book via the centres' websites.

The libraries at the School of Education and the School of Health Sciences along with the National and University Library of Iceland invite individuals and small groups to book times for help in finding sources for their academic work. More information can be found at the libraries’ websites.

Writing centre workshops

Workshops are a great way for people to come together for mutual support at all stages of writing, from the research question to the final draft. Participants can share ideas and give each other advice on their work.

The School of Humanities Writing Centre offers workshops for students who are writing their undergraduate theses. These are open to all students at the University of Iceland.

The School of Education Writing Centre holds a series of workshops for undergraduate and master’s students who are writing their theses. These are open to students in the School of Education.

More information about the offerings from both centres can be found on their respective websites.

The Long Night against Procrastination

At this event, students are invited to come for workshops, one-on-one assistance, and information all designed to help them finish their coursework and become better time managers.

The event takes place at the National and University Library of Iceland every year in spring, with offerings from the writing centres, Student and Career Counseling, the National and University Library of Iceland, and the libraries from the School of Education and the School of Health Sciences.
